

Is Access to Private Health Care a Constitutional Right?

Cambie Surgeries Corporation vs. BC Government, a current lawsuit before the B.C. Supreme Court, is challenging the constitutionality of regulations that ban private care for medically necessary services. The outcome of this court case could have significant implications on the future of healthcare, on the Canada Health Act, on health systems delivery and health services integration, and other policy and delivery issues. Our panel of health care experts will share their thoughts on this important case and engage in a lively dialogue with the audience on the current and future Canadian healthcare system.
